

About

Sweetboy is Anna Barnett, a singer-songwriter based in Los Angeles and Memphis, originally from North Carolina. She writes indie rock and Americana pop: big-feeling songs with sharp hooks, lyric-forward storytelling, and a southern undercurrent. Fiona Apple and Paramore lost in a Southern bookstore with an album to write.

Sweetboy began in 2018 in New York City, first as a collaboration with co-founder Jonathan Flores and evolving through lineups that have included Connor O'Sullivan and Nicholas Oddo. Barnett went full-time on music in 2023 and the project is now her primary creative home. Her songs are emotionally direct, with literary bones and pop-forward melodies. She writes about love, faith, politics, and figuring out how to live.

Sweetboy maintains ties to Memphis where she is helping develop an indie music venue. She has worked with producers Calvin Lauber, Torna, Mike Pepe, and Spence Bailey. Sweetboy has opened the Underwater Sunshine Festival and been featured in The Aquarian.

Press

"Sweetboy's music evokes the early days of new wave with an electronica slant, pushing the boundaries of how a pop band can also experiment freely." The Aquarian

"The harmony of music, style, imagery, and sound has been taken to such a level by Sweetboy that after glimpsing or hearing their music just once, you can become forever captivated." Indie Boulevard

"That song is fing awesome." Adam Duritz (Counting Crows)
